ALPSS POSTGRADUATE DIGITAL CONFERENCE:

Time | Presenter | Title | Abstract
---|---|---|---
9.40 | Brigitte Cornetti | How to Measure Gendermaining Law Reform in US States | Gendermaining—the manipulation of election district boundaries by politicians for partisan gain—is highly restricted by federal laws, but only a small number of states. How can we accurately measure and compare the amount of gendermaining law reform undertaken by the fifty states? How can we focus our efforts on states that are most in need of reform? This paper will evaluate and discuss several methods of assessing gendermaining law reform and compare their effectiveness.

9.50 | Jian Cheng Zheng | Disparities, media consumption and political engagement | China's Internet economy begins to live in new phase in the 21st century. The Internet and digital media have become an important part of China's Internet economy. This paper aims to explore the relationship between Internet and digital media consumption and political engagement in China. It will use the data from the China Internet Network Development Report 2020 to provide empirical evidence for this relationship. The findings of this study will provide insights for China's Internet economy and its political engagement.

9.55 | Jorge Bellos Lopez | The Reporting of Political Scandals in regulated and unregulated newspapers: A Comparative Analysis | This paper investigates the reporting of political scandals in regulated and unregulated newspapers in the United Kingdom, France, and Spain. It compares the two systems through an analysis of the number of scandals reported, the coverage of these scandals, and the ways in which they are presented. The findings suggest that regulated newspapers are more likely to report political scandals than unregulated newspapers, and that the coverage of these scandals is more critical in regulated newspapers.

10.10 | Tatiana Shilova | The role of sports tourists' attitudes and perceptions in shaping the development of tourism destinations | Sport tourism is a growing phenomenon in the tourism industry. This paper examines the role of sports tourists' attitudes and perceptions in shaping the development of tourism destinations. It explores how sport tourism influences the decision-making processes of destination managers and how it affects the development of tourism destinations. The findings suggest that sport tourism can be a powerful driver of tourism development, but it also poses challenges for destination managers.

10.35 | Antony Scholten | Ways of Life as Modes of Social Production | This paper examines the ways in which people's everyday lives are characterized by social production. It explores how people use their everyday lives to produce social relations and how these social relations are produced through everyday life. The findings suggest that social production is a fundamental aspect of everyday life and a key mechanism for producing social relations.

11.20 | Jyoti Vatsa | Children Born of UN Peacekeepers: Sports Tourists’ Attitudes Towards Time | This paper examines the attitudes and perceptions of sports tourists towards the time spent at their destinations. It explores how sports tourists perceive the time available at their destinations and how they use this time. The findings suggest that sports tourists are likely to have a positive attitude towards the time available at their destinations.

11.40 | Katya Strykova | The role of patrons in improving the quality of life for children born of UN peacekeepers | This paper examines the role of patrons in improving the quality of life for children born of UN peacekeepers. It explores how patrons can support these children and how they can contribute to their development. The findings suggest that patrons can play a crucial role in improving the quality of life for these children.

12.10 | Emily Hall | Expansion of Lauridsen's model of political engagement within the context of the Chilean education system | This paper expands Lauridsen's model of political engagement within the context of the Chilean education system. It explores how political engagement is practiced within the Chilean education system and how it differs from Lauridsen's model. The findings suggest that political engagement within the Chilean education system is characterized by a focus on the rights of students and by a strong emphasis on participation.
An exploration of the Antarctic lens of English-speaking Antarctic research stations.

Most research on Antarctica and the Southern Ocean is based in the local communities with only a small percentage coming from the scientific community, the humanities, psychology, Geopolitical Anthropology and history (Bendiksen, Heawkes & Viti del Vico, 2014). However, there are other factors such as, for example, on-going partnerships resulting from Antarctic research indicating that some projects, activities or the University of York (Humanities, Politics and International Relations) has a research unit that focuses on the representation of Antarctica in the media and public perception of the region.

1.50 Mark Tootoo

Launched, not gold nor fruit.
Extracting of 'waharoa' symmetry from Rongowhaka tapsāwaka language returning in Almati Martin's 3 Days. Page 2/4

The first of a two-page essay, a common definition for haka language reference (Hei) is a symbol which gives an impression of control and reference, framing shorthand or at times, a genuine attempt to mislead or second-guess the audience.

The art that destroys the myth that this is possible. The question of what is the point of a new language? The art of returning to a haka's heritage (Hei) can occur within the 'Waharoa'. This means that the haka returns culture contexts, scene, and revenge from the Hei, with no other language. A shared Hei. A shared Hei.

1.30 Karamena

From Aotearoa to America: Māori and the Intersection of Settler Colonialism and Cultures of Resilience

As early as the 1830s, the Māori had established the United States (US) as a place to call home. As part of the long-term migration patterns, this paper extends our knowledge of migration from New Zealand to the US. Through archival work, interviews and oral histories, this paper explores the stories of Māori, as well as their experiences and contributions within the United States. Some people believe, the papers have been presented and/or discussed in key conferences and journals, and this paper will present selected preliminary findings from extensive interviews in which I have asked contemporary Māori in the US to express themselves on their personal identity-making experiences, articulating their cultural identities, and exploring the long-term migration patterns of Māori people to the United States.

1.10 Michelle Hay

Adolescent Anxieties: An exploration of Cultural Hybridity through the Self-determination of Indigenous American Chicano

During the 1980s, in the wake of the civil rights movement, American workers began to re-examine and question many of the United States. In order to achieve social and political equality, workers formed new groups and organizations to fight for their rights. In this paper, I will explore the self-determination of Indigenous American Chicano workers and the ways in which they are able to assert their cultural identity.

I have investigated the self-determination conflicts in West Papua as a part of the local issues in the region. It is also one of the Indigenous Issues in the World. It has lack of solutions when it comes to history. It is a lack of issues when we come to human rights issues, historically, West Papua has been incorporated into Indonesia through the (illegal) 1969 Pigage Agreement, evoking the Netherlands and the Dutch colonial system. Consequently, the Portuguese system of administration has been replaced by a new system of administration, based on the self-determination conflicts in West Papua. These conflicts have been an important factor in the self-determination conflicts and in the cultural identity of the indigenous peoples in the region.

1.05 Many Haid

Fun Home for the stage

I am inspired by the American theatre company Taisi i Papua: Samoan medical practitioners and activists in New Zealand.

This paper looks at the crucial moment of Bechdel's father's death, and how this is presented in the comic, in the script, and how it is embodied on the stage.

This research is an exploration of personal discovery and theatre, and the rituals of theatre production. My research is an exploration of self-determination and theatre, and the ways in which theatre can be used as a means to promote personal development and, ultimately, to change society.

1.00 Holly Parker

The Intersection between Settler Colonialism and Cultures of Resilience

Beauty in the Eye of the Beholder: The Intersection between Settler Colonialism and Cultures of Resilience: This paper examines the visual representation of beauty in the context of settler colonialism and resilience. It explores the ways in which beauty is constructed and consumed in settler colonial contexts and how these constructions are negotiated by Indigenous peoples.

The paper argues that the settler colonial context is characterized by a lack of cultural diversity, an absence of traditional knowledge systems, and a lack of recognition of the contributions of Indigenous peoples. This context is further characterized by the marginalization of Indigenous peoples, the loss of cultural identity, and the displacement of Indigenous cultures. The paper examines the ways in which the settler colonial context is characterized by an absence of traditional knowledge systems and a lack of recognition of the contributions of Indigenous peoples.

This paper examines the intersection between settler colonialism and resilience and explores the ways in which Indigenous peoples have been able to resist and transform these contexts. It examines the ways in which Indigenous peoples have been able to reclaim and assert their cultural identities, and to resist the marginalization and displacement of their cultures. This paper explores the ways in which Indigenous peoples have been able to reclaim and assert their cultural identities, and to resist the marginalization and displacement of their cultures.

This paper examines the intersection between settler colonialism and resilience and explores the ways in which Indigenous peoples have been able to resist and transform these contexts. It examines the ways in which Indigenous peoples have been able to reclaim and assert their cultural identities, and to resist the marginalization and displacement of their cultures.

1.00 Catherine O'Grady

The influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition (SLA) has generally been researched around classroom lesson delivery. Furthermore, those few studies that included online lesson delivery were performed prior to the COVID-19 outbreak. In Japan the emergency change to online lesson delivery due to COVID-19 is currently halfway through its second year with some university students still adapting to this new format of education. The purpose of this study is to examine the influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition in Japan and to compare it with the results of previous studies.

The influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition (SLA) has generally been researched around classroom lesson delivery. Furthermore, those few studies that included online lesson delivery were performed prior to the COVID-19 outbreak. In Japan the emergency change to online lesson delivery due to COVID-19 is currently halfway through its second year with some university students still adapting to this new format of education. The purpose of this study is to examine the influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition in Japan and to compare it with the results of previous studies.

The influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition (SLA) has generally been researched around classroom lesson delivery. Furthermore, those few studies that included online lesson delivery were performed prior to the COVID-19 outbreak. In Japan the emergency change to online lesson delivery due to COVID-19 is currently halfway through its second year with some university students still adapting to this new format of education. The purpose of this study is to examine the influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition in Japan and to compare it with the results of previous studies.

The influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition (SLA) has generally been researched around classroom lesson delivery. Furthermore, those few studies that included online lesson delivery were performed prior to the COVID-19 outbreak. In Japan the emergency change to online lesson delivery due to COVID-19 is currently halfway through its second year with some university students still adapting to this new format of education. The purpose of this study is to examine the influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition in Japan and to compare it with the results of previous studies.

The influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition (SLA) has generally been researched around classroom lesson delivery. Furthermore, those few studies that included online lesson delivery were performed prior to the COVID-19 outbreak. In Japan the emergency change to online lesson delivery due to COVID-19 is currently halfway through its second year with some university students still adapting to this new format of education. The purpose of this study is to examine the influence of reading and writing anxiety on second language acquisition in Japan and to compare it with the results of previous studies.